Summary

I assist entrepreneurs, companies and startups in the internationalisation and innovation phases, business aspects which I am acquainted with since my postgraduate LL.M. degree in Innovation, Technology and the Law at the University of Edinburgh in 2006.

I am currently involved in blockchain-related projects and ICOs. I also advise established companies and digital startups in the legal aspects of new technologies, commercial contracts, M&A deals and corporate matters including international corporate structures, due diligence, open innovation deals, e-commerce and app development.

My experience is both as an outside legal counsel and in-house lawyer.

I am Co-Organizer of Legal Hackers Torino, the first Italian chapter of the global movements of lawyers and innovators that deals with the most pressing issues at the intersection of law and technology.

I am also speaker and trainer in the field of digital innovation, legaltech, blockchain, smart contracts, cryptocurrencies and ICOs.

Legal Hackers is a global movement of lawyers, policymakers, designers, technologists, and academics who explore and develop creative solutions to some of the most pressing issues at the intersection of law and technology. Through local meetups, hackathons, and workshops, Legal Hackers spot issues and opportunities where technology can improve and inform the practice of law and where law, legal practice, and policy can adapt to rapidly changing technology.

Legal Hackers is the largest grassroots legal innovation movement in the world, with around 200 chapters on six continents.

We are explorers. We are doers. We are Legal Hackers.
